THE HISTORY OF MYRR

First Humans

Humans first came to Myrr[1] long ago. The first human settlers to reach this small continent were the Originals. They came from a western land called Zogg. Oswald Myrr, a famous wizard, was the leader of this small adventuring party of seven, which, rumor has it, also included a monk, a paladin, two rangers, a bard, and a cleric. They found a peaceful continent, mild in climate and full of beautiful forests, mountains, hills, rivers, and lakes, and they named it after their leader.

Elves lived in the East, dwarves in the North, and some halflings and gnomes in the South, but the western part of Myrr was sparsely populated. There, Oswald Myrr continued the experiments he had not been allowed to finish in Zogg. Then the Originals spread out and explored the continent together...except for one. Zoth the monk disappeared into the Southern Territories.

A decade later, Oswald Myrr negotiated a peace deal with the high elves that was known as the Amakiir Treaty. Both humans and elves agreed that the Nerathian Kingdom in the northern Eastwood would be continue to exist as it always had. The high elves agreed not to move further west. It was agreed humans wouldn't venture east of the town of Loren or north of Lake Galinai.

For many years, several waves of settlers arrived on ships from Zogg. A noble family called the Kellans was the first to rule western Myrr, from the throne in the city of Wyld. Oswald was good friends with this noble family and supported them whenever he could. The well-loved Kellan family ruled peacefully for many years.

The Goblin Wars

After some time, conflicts arose. In 37 MY[2] the city of Wyld twice came under attack by hordes of goblins from the Mountains of the Moon. After several months the human inhabitants drove the evil humanoids back into the mountains. After this battle, the Wyld Guard was formed to protect the city. In the Second Goblin War, the goblins attacked from the Old Wood and the

---

[1] One of the nine continents of the World of Myrr.
[2] Myrrian Year